Rescue Squad "Charlie" Says

"SCHOOLS ARE OPEN DRIVE CAREFULLY! APPOMATTOX DOESN'T HAVE A CHILD TO SPARE."

Letter To The Editor

The Editor, Times Virginian
Appomattox, Va. 24522

Dear Sir:

This is an open letter to the public and a heartfelt plea from a mother of five children (4 in school) for safer driving speeds and habits especially during the hours from 8 to 9 a. m. and 3 to 4 p. m.

Here is a short summary of dangerous occasions concerning only one of the thousands of school buses on Virginia highways.

Mrs. Katherine Wingfield drives bus 30 from Appomattox to Vera and the Buckingham County line area. She is a very capable driver and is to be commended for her efforts on September 19. Her quick thinking, no doubt, saved the lives of the children on her bus when a truck loaded with wood hit a pick-up truck as she was stopped to discharge a child. She quickly moved the bus off Highway 24 so as to avoid being rammed in the side.

The week before this a car-load of young people failed to stop for the flagman and bus when they were attempting to get several children across the road to their homes safely.

Again on September 30, as she was stopped to pick up children, a car coming up behind the bus applied the brakes, turned side ways, and slid several feet before the bus and off the road.

As I stated, this is the dangerous situations surrounding only one school bus. There have been others that were'nt so blessed or lucky.

I love my children as most parents love theirs so let's do something! Although I pray daily for our driver and the children's safety, I am still very concerned about the carelessness of others.

Isn't there something concerned parents can do about this situation? How about a law allowing speeds no more than 35 miles per hour during the hours that school buses are on the road? How about flashing warning signs stating school bus stop ahead? What about stiff fines or jail sentences for all offenders involving a school bus?

Please help us keep our children safe. . . drive carefully all the time but especially so where a school bus is involved.

There is talk and more talk about ecology, the world situation, conservation problems, etc. that our youngster face in the future but what is more important than conserving their lives so they, at least, have a chance to face that future.

The Pastor Speaks

"CHURCHES GOING TO THE DOGS."

I Tim. 3:14-15 "these things write I — that thou mayest know how thou oughtest to behave theyself in the House of God —".

Some years ago the Associated Press carried this story, "fifty dogs and cats received blessings today at a Church service without letting out a bark, whimper, or meow. One by one the animals and their owners marched toward their communion rail where the Minister awaited them. Placing his hand on the head of the animals, he prayed 'Bless oh Lord this thy pet and grant that he may always be a joy to the human companion'. About 150 persons attended the service. 'Never has there been a more distinguished congregation in this Church', the minister remarked jokingly as he looked down the isle at rows of poodles, boxers, collies and Mongrels. His own dog, Skeezix, a regular visitor, stood quietly while the Pastor spoke. There was no noise, no barks, no growls, no disorder. It was a very quiet dignified service.

I would say that this church has "gone to the dogs". What a tragedy to become so side-tracked that instead of preaching the Word of God for the spiritual needs of man, the "House of God" is used as a blessing station for animals. Although the Church mentioned above presents a most extreme situation it should warn us of the ever present danger of Local Churches being diverted from their primary function. Most Churches would never think of a dog and cat service but they are often drawn into social events, fun raising programs, banquets and similar activities, and their real work is neglected.

The New Testament Church faithfully preached the Word of God, exalted Christ and observed the ordinances. The believers had fellowship one with another, were spiritually feed and thus were enabled to witness for Christ and win others to the Saviour. Any congregation which departs from these simple truths is going to the dogs". Let us do our part, therefore, to keep the local Church on the firm foundation as laid down in the Word of God. The world at its worst demands a Church at its best.

The Churches are foundation is Jesus Christ her Lord She is His new creation by water and the Word.

The Sunday School Lesson

Comments on the International Sunday School Lesson for October 1, 1972. Social Change: Mass Communications Background Scripture: Ephesians 4:11-16, 25-32; Philippians 4:8-9; 2 Timothy 4:1-5

Therefore, putting away falsehood, let every one speak the truth with his neighbor, for we are members one of another. Ephesians 4:25

When the apostle Paul went on his missionary journeys, there were no newspapers to announce his arrival in town or to report his persecution or his sermons. There was no radio on which he could broadcast messages far beyond the carrying power of his voice into homes and places of work. There was no television on which he could be seen and heard by millions. There have come about, largely in the century in which we are living, radical changes in the means of communication, which have made the world one neighborhood. What happens almost anywhere in the world can be known to the farthest reaches of earth in a matter of minutes.

Though the apostle Paul knew nothing of the mass communications which are commonplace to us in 1972, some of the advice and guidance he gave to Christians in the first century, A.D., are pertinent and applicable to our use of these communications media today.

With the development and use of mass communications have come serious and weighty questions of credibility. The media have a vast potential for influencing human thought and action, not only from the way in which the news is reported but also from the way advertising is presented. What shall we believe? is a question news reports and advertising raise in the minds of millions. Of even greater concern is the acceptance by many of what they see and hear through the media without question. The Scripture texts for today's International Sunday School lesson are pertinent to these questions.

It would be trite, were it not so vital to all humanity, to say that great and continuing battles are being waged for the minds of people. There are those who want to convince as many as they can of the rightness of their side and persuade others to agree with them; there are those who want to get as many people as possible to buy their product or use their service. This fall we are seeing this effort to convince and persuade in a particularly virulent form, in the appeals of political candidates. The effort is made in religion too.

The claims and counter claims, the appeals and contrary appeals, the presentations of the same event or circumstance in different lights or in different interpretations confuse and may really misinform. They may create distorted impressions which result in mistaken conclusions.

Today's lesson has something to say to both those who are the targets in the battle for the mind and to those who aim at that target. In one paragraph of the letter to the Ephesians the need is shown to be prepared to deal intelligently with controversies and the persuasive allurements of cunning men. Each individual should prepare himself to appraise wisely, to judge prudently, and to discriminate fairly among what is given him in the effort to win his mind. This preparation, though, cannot be fully adequate to cope with the bombardment through mass communications of those who seek to capture the human mind.

Those who seek to influence the minds of people have an obligation and a responsibility also, which is summarized in the letter to the Ephesians, "putting away falsehood, let every one speak the truth with his neighbor ..." While this counsel is applicable to every one, to none is it more so than a group of cattle that he has on feed that are about ready for market. There are 22 steers and 5 heifers in the group.

With relatively cheap feed grains and our ability to produce high quality silage here's a real opportunity to feed out more cattle on our farms.

We've had a number of calls recently for information on how to control loopers on cabbage and turnip greens.

For the home gardener Bacillus Thuringenises is the only thing that will control them. There are other insecticides for the commercial grower but they may be "too hot" for the average home gardener.

Warren Taylor tells me that more than 60 outbreaks of Pine Bark Beetles have been identified in Appomattox County. Where one or two trees were found last spring it has now spread to 1/4 to 3/4 acre.

There have been three broods this year and the foresters are expecting a fourth which could be the worst. The absences of real cold weather last winter is given as the cause of the high level of bark beetles.

Frank Wooding says a portion of strips and harvest them if you'll have the data processed at VPI & SU".

With this background the grains selected were Blueboy Wheat and Roanoke and Compact Oats. Prior to seeding the site was plowed and disced twice. 700 pounds of 20-10-10 was broadcast and grain planted October 14. The Oat varieties were seeded at the rate of three bushels per acre and the Blueboy Wheat at one-bushel per acre. A total of ten replications of each variety was planted.

On June 13 six samples were collected from alternate strips of each variety. A sample consisted of seven square feet. The cut was made two inches above ground level.

The results were amazing since Roanoke Oats grow at least 12 inches taller than Compact. Blueboy is a high yielding wheat so a high yield could be anticipated. Here we need to recognize that in determining the results we need to recognize that Compact has more winter hardness than Roanoke therefore, a planting made in October favored Compact. Also, we need to recognize that a large percentage of the total digestable nutrients would come from the grain rather than the stem and leaves (straw).

Blueboy wheat averaged 8.9 tons of dry matter, .64 tons of crude protein and 4.6 tons of TDN.

Roanoke Oats averaged 5.3 tons of dry matter, .40 tons of crude protein and 3.3 tons of TDN.

Since Oats are more often raised for hay than wheat lets compare the two varieties. There was two more tons of feed and as indicated earlier this is largely because of better survival. Roanoke is rated only fair for hardness.

There was 460 additional pounds of crude protein produced in the compact variety. Based on crude protein being currently worth about 15 cents a pound, this along was worth $69.

However, oat hay is not produced for its protein content but for total nutrients. Compact again came through with 2600 pounds more nutrients.

This is data from one situation and for one year - we need additional tests for a final conclusion.

Other Appomattox farmers like Carter Martin, and Ed Harvey are growing Compact Oats. Just because they are short - Don't sell them short. They may have a place in your grain and forage program.

"Making the most of what you own..."

Buddy Eggleston, Vice President and Manager of Fidelity's Appomattox office, talks frankly about banking here in Appomattox.

"Fidelity, as you know, is a big bank. And because we are, we're able to offer our friends a vitally important service that can save you and your family literally thousands of dollars over a lifetime.

"I'm talking about our Trust Department, which is staffed by highly trained professionals in money management.

"After you've spent years in building an estate, which can include your home, life insurance, stocks and bonds, a savings account, things like that, you should get maximum use of it. And later on, there should be as much of it left for your family's use as possible. Making it happen this way requires skills and knowledge the average 'friend of the family' executor just doesn't have.

"That's when the Trust Department of a big bank like Fidelity can mean so much. Since we've settled so many estates before, we don't use the trial and error approach at your family's expense. Working closely with your attorney and life underwriter, we take a coordinated approach to your financial picture that results in making the most of what you own.

Fidelity's Trust Department. Another service from the big bank you can depend on.

Which Oat Variety For Hay?

By J. A. Smith
Extension Agent

So you're going to grow small grain for hay. Which small grain do you plant? Or better yet, which variety of small grain do you plant?

L. L. Stewart, Jr. who owns a farm in the Evergreen Community raised these questions with this writer several years ago. There was no research to answer these questions, since most small grain research relates to grain yield, disease resistance, and winter hardness. After all, a very high percentage of small grain is grown for grain and for most farmers this information would be academic.

Stewart said, "then lets find out. I'll plant a series of strips and harvest them if you'll have the data processed at VPI & SU".

With this background the grains selected were Blueboy Wheat and Roanoke and Compact Oats. Prior to seeding the site was plowed and disced twice. 700 pounds of 20-10-10 was broadcast and grain planted October 14.
